Peki Providing Tailored Solutions for Rigid Performance

Leading Australian trailer manufacturer Peki will demonstrate its strength and experience in providing tailored solutions for transport applications involving specialised goods and materials at the upcoming International Trailer, Truck and Equipment Show in Melbourne.

The Peki Meat Hanger Rigid Body is one such tailored solution that will be on display. The unit was recently developed by Peki for a customer requiring a van that would provide thermal efficiency and excellent temperature control – critical elements in meat transport operations.

The rigid body was constructed incorporating moulded fibreglass panels and polished Peki aluminium extrusion system mounted to a steel-sub-frame to maintain reliable temperature levels during operation.

The side walls feature a 40mm polyurethane core with bonded fibreglass skins whilst the front wall uses a 90mm core. The roof of the van is made using 120mm polyurethane insulated foam with fibreglass composite skins and ribs for added support while the floor contains 100mm polyurethane insulated foam mounted between cross members.

Another key feature is the floor which was constructed using heavy duty palletized non-slip fibreglass mounted directly into the floor cross member to enhance reinforcement and strength.

Appearance and presentation are also important elements, as a truck body or trailer with excellent fit and finish attracts attention whether in the process of making a delivery or traveling down the highway. Importantly, in the case of meat transport, an aesthetically pleasing truck body or trailer reinforces the message of a professional, hygienic and efficient operator, and also allows for easier cleaning of both the exterior and interior of the body.

In line with the importance of accountability in modern food transport, Peki bodies and trailers comply with all relevant regulations, and owners can rest assured that they are benefiting from Peki's 30 years of experience delivering trailing solutions to the transport industry.
